Charting the Way: A Handbook for Postsecondary Educational Interpreters

Charting the Way is the only resource of its kind, focusing on higher education and interpreting. Designed to be a tool for interpreters who are pursuing national certification or working with mentors, the book is a valuable addition to any interpreting office, disability services office, or interpreter training program library.

Some of the book's features include:

- 110 lessons (11 sections in each of the ten units) on topics of skill development, mentoring, technology, professional growth, the Deaf community, higher education, ethics and legal issues, self-care and more!
- Over 100 interactive exercises to help interpreters apply what they already know and what they learn while doing Charting the Way activities
- Videos of Deaf and hearing college-level faculty and students – great for skill development and assessment
- Over 20 articles, on topics including interpreting, sign language, Deaf culture and injury prevention
- National and regional resources, including books, organizations, professional journals and web sites
- Assessment tools for interpreters “charting their way” towards certification or improved interpreting skills

Charting the Way is especially relevant for interpreters, interpreter coordinators, ITP instructors and disability services directors. Teachers of ASL, Postsecondary, K-12 and rural interpreters will also find the book helpful in charting progress towards national certification, identifying professional resources, and developing ideas for staff development, classes and training sessions.
